There is a slight chance of light freezing rain or sleet this morning across the South Plains. Amounts are expected to remain very light and little or no ice accumulation is expected. Later on, temperatures will warm above freezing with a plain cold rain expected this afternoon. The best chances of afternoon rainfall will be across the Rolling Plains.

Potential Light Icing Sunday Morning

Warming above freezing by 10 AM

Weather Forecast Office

Midland/Odessa, TX

Issued January 20, 2024 2:27 PM CST

Temperatures will drop below freezing tonight with very light precipitation developing by morning.

What We Can Expect:

- Temperatures will drop into the upper 20's and low 30's tonight and Sunday morning
- Very light precipitation may develop in the Big Bend and Stockton Plateau around sunrise
- Temperatures will remain below freezing until ~10 AM
- Light freezing rain/drizzle will be possible in the shaded region before temperatures warm above freezing with little to no accumulation
- Slick spots mainly on bridges possible along U.S. 90, 285, 385, TX 118 and I-10

Stay tuned for updates!

NWSMidland

Light freezing rain is possible across the Big Bend and Lower Trans Pecos Sunday morning. Little to no accumulation will limit impacts to mainly bridges.

Hazardous Weather

Freezing rain chances begin as early as 4 PM. Impacts to travel are possible quickly after onset.

A low impact freezing weather event is expected Sunday evening and night. The main impacts will be along the Red River/Texoma region, where ice may temporarily accumulate on bridges and overpasses. Closer to the I-20 corridor, most roads and bridges will remain ice free. A few of the highest overpasses may experience temporary ice patches. Any icy conditions will improve by sunrise as temperatures increase above freezing.
