Hazardous Weather

Wet conditions and some risk for flooding remains from this morning through the day across South Central Texas. After 2 to 5 inches of prior rainfall for portions of the region, an additional 1 to 3 inches is expected primarily along and south of the I-10 and US Highway 90 corridor through tonight.

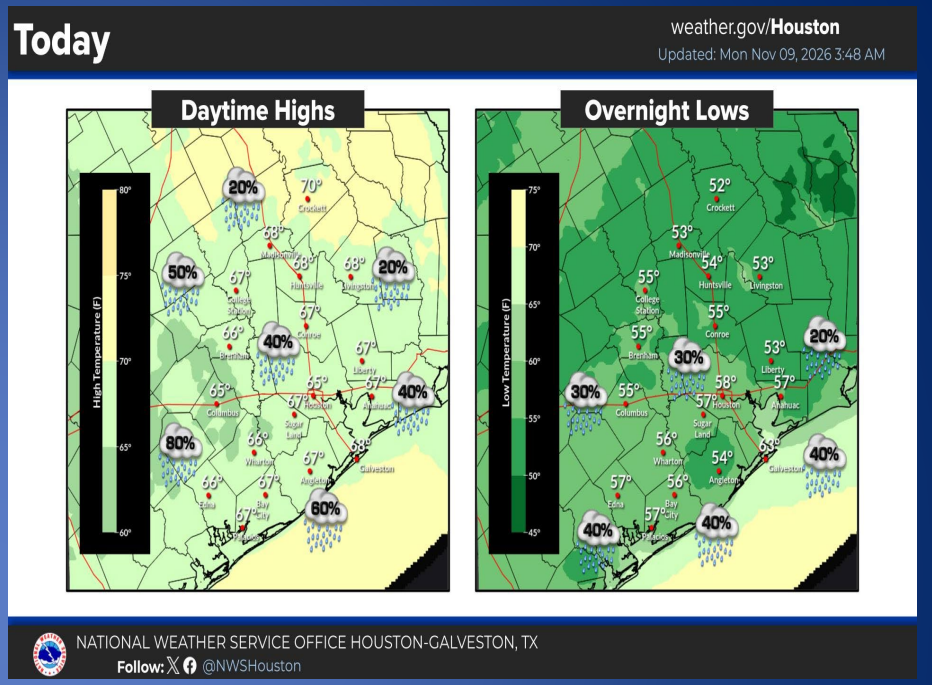

Additional showers and thunderstorm chances maintain a Marginal Risk (level 1 of 4) to Slight Risk (level 2 of 4) of excessive rainfall, leading to isolated to scattered flash flooding through tonight. Stay weather aware this weekend and visit weather.gov/bro for the latest.

Hazardous Weather

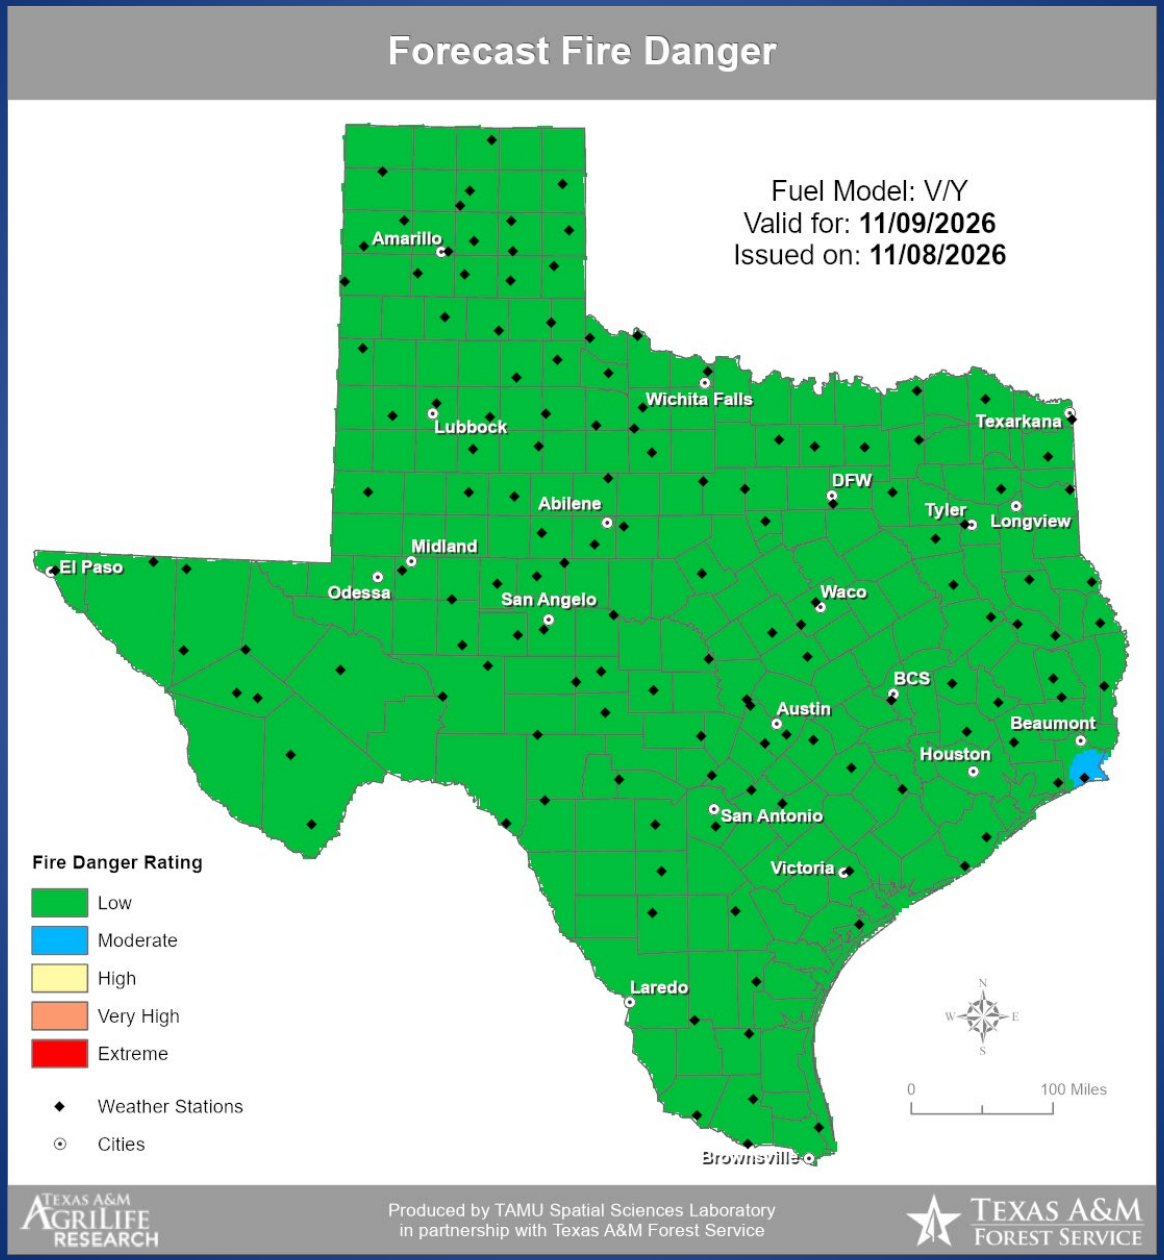

A Flood Watch continues for most of South Texas through noon today. Rainfall amounts of 2-4 inches, with isolated areas of 6+ inches are still possible. Stay tuned for the latest updates and remember: Turn Around, Don't Drown!

Today will be cool and wet. Highs during the day will be in the upper 60s/lower 70s with a 20-80% chance of rain, highest west of I-45/south of I-10. Lows overnight will drop into the 50s/60s with a 20-40% chance of rain.
